With President Obama's party receiving a rude shock just a week earlier due to the defeat in Massachusetts to Republican Scott Brown, the president is hard at work in ensuring that the people in the country receive incentives and other help, so that the impact from the recent economic recession can be softened considerably.

Earlier, Obama announced that families that are earning under the $85,000 margin, will receive child care tax credit. On the other hand, Obama also announced that the government has allocated a whopping $1.6 billion additional funds for the child care programs.

Personally, I think that this is a good start for Obama, even though they lost Massachusetts, which was a traditionally Democrat stronghold.
